| Good and Sufficient Reasons Temple Talks, Alpha Series

Church Attendance is a Peerless Monitor. The ceaseless round of daily toil constantly reminds us that we are stenographers, salesmen, housekeepers, or mechanics; and the present peril is, that when we have met the requirements of six strenuous days in our vocations, we are apt to infer that we are nothing more than units in the great world of toil. Foreseeing this peril, God set apart the Sabbath day for rest and worship to remind us again that we are the children of His love and care. When a man loses the sense of his origin and destiny, he is a spiritual bankrupt. Church attendance will not let us forget these essential truths.

The Church is the House of Good Fellowship. Loneliness is the parent of many ills, but the fraternal spirit has banished half the world's sorrows. Statesmen know the value of fellowship, with it they effect great reformations, and lift themselves and their parties into seats of power. Witness the influence of political social clubs and fraternities. Without the bond of social sympathy the extensive order of lodges would collapse. It is but natural that one should find a high degree of brotherhood within the church. Here each copies after the beautiful pattern of its Founder, Jesus Christ. Church attendance lifts a man out of his own little world and he cultivates a wholesome sympathy which make discouraged people feel that they are not fighting their battle alone. Like fellow soldiers, church going men have a fellow feeling, and it helps one mightily.

The Order of Public Worship is Elevating. It presents the open Bible from whose pages God speaks to the congregation, reviving the spirit of reverence. Here we join in cheerful songs, which brighten the dark corners of human experience like sunbeams that pierce the prisoner's cell. And these songs do not leave us when we leave the church, but through them we spread the contagion of gladness everywhere. Church attendance brings us in touch with the personal preaching of the Gospel. Literature, howsoever valuable it may be in the development of character, will always lack the vitality and charm of the speaker. A man is more valuable than his book.

The Church Affords a Splendid Means of Honoring God. "If your best friend were to come to town from some other city, and his other friends were to give him a reception on a certain day in the week, you would count it a great joy to attend, and thus honor your friend and show your love for him. The friends of Jesus Christ give Him a reception at certain hours on Sunday, and it surely cannot help but make us better and happier in every way if we honor our Lord by being present on such occasions."
